

“Democracy: The Heart of Governance”

As a new citizen of the United States of America, I am smitten by the unique and beautiful principles of democracy in this country compared to my mother country though it may seem to be just a system of government, I see it as a connection between people and a celebration of the bravery to stand up and speak honestly to those in power. It is a living embodiment of shared humanity, where every person's voice matters, and everyone is heard.

Democracy originated when a group of brave people in 1776 stood up against tyranny and proved to them that people have the right to shape their destiny. It set up a revolutionary spirit for our nation built on the principles of liberty and justice, which shaped how bewildering our government is until now. The essence of democracy is what makes America feel alive! It connects us, reminding us that we're all part of something bigger.

Voting in a democracy expresses who we are and what we believe in. Amazingly, we get not just to choose a candidate but also to make a choice or statement about what kind of world we want to live in. Voting in a democracy is about the shared belief that we can create a better society together. Democracy, for me, is not just a system; it is a love letter to humanity.
